I thought this was a wonderful book about a boy, named Will, and different points in his life, either going up hill, or straight down. His life tells of many things that would and could happen to other kids and teenagers. My favorite passage in this book, “the gum ball machine (first depression)”, tells of how everyday is no more than a piece of gum, waiting to be chewed, spent, then spat out.. It was a wonderful book that was funny, touching, and a great book for a teen, like myself, to read.
